Legal education in India generally refers to the education of lawyers before entry into practice. Legal education in India is offered at different levels by the traditional universities and the Specific law universities and schools only after completion of an undergraduate degree or as an integrated degree.

Legal education is essentially a multi-disciplined, multi-purpose education which can develop the human resources and idealism needed to strengthen the legal system. A lawyer, a product of such education would be able to contribute to national development and social change in a much more constructive manner. Lawyers are also called as social engineers. The scope of legal education in India has changed from some past ten years.

The most commonly practiced law degree, bachelor of law is offered and awarded by Indian universities as a three-year course, Master of laws is the postgraduate degree of the bachelor of laws. In the present age legal education in India is not satisfactory. It requires radical change. The law is an instrument of change. It plays a very important role in the reconstruction of the society. Our constitution has given guarantee to it's citizens social, economic and political justice.

The directive principles of state policy as enshrined in the Constitution of India, attempt to transform society, social, economic and political aspirations of the people have changed. We are governed by law, therefore a change in the system of legal education has become inevitable. We in India still cherish and flourish that very education system which was established by British in India.

Judges, lawyers and law teachers could not change basic postulates of common law. They do not play any role in the formulation of policies, law colleges and universities perennially followed traditional path. We want jurists of eminence and judges of repute. Since law is one of social sciences, therefore, the study of history, politics, economics and sociology should be linked with the study of law. Legal education give new vision to lawyers and jurists, language is the life of law. The examination system of our universities is defective.. It is outdated and obsolete. It is hardly test or examination. Legal education requires special attention in the present context. Law classes are overcrowded

There is dearth of law teachers. The bar council of India could not properly regulate legal education. The resolution passed by bar council of India are not implemented. Lectures delivered by faculty should be supported by important cases. The basic concept of law should be taught. Moot court are very important for law students. Standard and cheap books should be published by the proper authorities.

Group discussions, seminars and tutorials are also useful for the Proper understanding of law.

Proper arrangements for the court visits and practical training to the law students. A minimum financial assistance should also be provided by bar council of India to the poor as well as to the intelligent law students.
